Japanese vegetable seeds for your home garden

The Project

The Dishii Nippon Project was created by Tokyo Seed Company, headquartered in Saitama, Japan. Based on over a century of vegetable seed expertise, this project aims to share Japan's Wafukoku culture with gardens, farms and tables all over the world.

For over 1000 years, the Japanese culinary tradition has highlighted the goodness and seasonality of carefully selected ingredients, presented with such wisdom and care as to become works of art.

Cooking with Florette

Florette can be used in place of standard cauliflower or broccoli in most recipes. The versatile vegetable can be enjoyed raw in salads and slaws, or lightly sautéed for a minute or two to add a touch of golden caramelization.

The long stems lend themselves to dipping, either cooked or raw.

When roasted, Florette becomes delectably tender and combines wonderfully with the flavors of various herbs, spices and other seasonings. The hearts also work well for a unique take on tempura, especially paired with fish and sea salt. Try it roasted, tossed with herbs and parmesan.

Growing Details

Varieties

- Florette 26: long day variety for summer growing (spring planting, 70 days to maturity).
- Florette 85: best for shorter days (fall planting), 85 days to maturity.
- Both grow similarly and can follow the guidelines below.

Germination

- Transplanting required: Sow 1-2 seeds per cell into a 72-cell tray.
- Ensure cells are completely filled to avoid air pockets.
- Sow seeds 1/4" deep and cover gently. Avoid pressing firmly as compaction can cause difficulty transplanting.
- Water to one plant per cell once established.
- Over watering can create excess film soil layer, preventing germination. Mix in soil moisture through germination.

Transplanting

- Check for seedlings 20-25 days after germination by gently pulling on the base of the stems to see if roots are established and the soil is held together.
- Transplant to 8" spacing, with 18"-24" between rows.

Harvest

- Harvest when stems to maturity is reached and stems are 6-8" in length.
- Cut the base of the head and remove smaller stems from the main stalk.
